The Current State of Developing Climate Change Policies and Implementation Procedures Course #509

While numerous policy and planning advancements on climate change policy have been made by national agencies and private entities in the past few years, U.S. states have played a critical leadership role in the road mapping and implementation of climate policies in the past decade. More activity at the state level is anticipated as climate change policy evolves.

As a part of energy and environmental reforms, we are striving to provide the best understanding of policy options and many of the best opportunities for new and integrated approaches.

This seminar will provide an update of climate policy and trends, and will discuss sub national, national, and international policy developments. These will include state and regional climate policy, macroeconomic opportunity and stimulus issues, adaptation, integrating state and federal climate policy, and what preparations are being undertaken for implementing climate action plans.
